

Tim Tebow vs. Jeremy Lin

To begin, in my opinion, both of these athletes are GREAT YOUNG MEN OF GOD!! I have a wonderful feeling for each of them.....believe it!

Nevertheless, I see one gigantic difference in their incredible instant global popularity. In the case of Tim Tebow, I believe there was a sinister right wing force(s) that seized the opportunity the split second they saw Tim, (who did it out of the love of his faith and nothing more), place Scripture on his below eye patch (that many football players use to cut down glare), and instantly recognized the political benefits of promoting that in a big way; even though such a thing would be incredibly dangerous if all players were allowed to publicize their religious beliefs before national audiences. Just imagine the massive public outcry if one of the NFL's Muslim players put "I Love Allah" or "The Qur'an IS the Word of God" on his eye patch before a national audience!!! Have Mercy! The public would be ready to crucify and ban him forever!!

Instead every legitimate pro player evaluator, said Tim Tebow did not possess the necessary skills to be an NFL quarterback right away; and would at best go in the late rounds and taken as a project. Yet to everyone's great surprise, Denver took Tim IN THE FIRST ROUND; shocking all.

There was a 5 to 6 game stretch where the Broncos won games that were almost insanely incredible, where Tim showed why the evaluators were correct in their assessment of him for 55 out of 60 minutes, when all of a sudden, uncanny and rare errors plus Tim's well documented great will to win, snatched victories from the certain jaws of defeat. Even with this unbelievable success, John Elway, a GREAT QB himself, recognized the truth about Tim (as a quarterback) and said that he hoped Tim would be their QB of the future.

My point: Denver, in my opinion, was FORCED to take Tim and make him a starter by right wing forces (Family Focus?) to promote their beliefs onto a huge stage for purely right wing political advantage.

I repeat: I admire and respect Tim Tebow (whose faith I surely share) as a person; and could see myself calling him a friend; exactly as I feel about Jeremy Lin. The big difference between the two is that Jeremy Lin's surge in global popularity is a case of pure talent finally getting a chance to shine on, without question, the biggest basketball stage on the planet: NEW YORK, and that is PRECISELY what he did. Tim Tebow has still to learn his craft.

Blessings to each of you!
